

SLS Help Local School

When Chris Coleman, manager of the Medical School Stores at the University of Nottingham, decided to donate surplus glassware to a local school, there was a natural choice of partner to help him make his generous offer possible – Scientific Laboratory Supplies (SLS).

Having enjoyed a long relationship with SLS, Mr Coleman immediately contacted the East Midlands SLS sales representative Richard Rhodes for help in finding and co-ordinating the supply of the glassware to a lucky recipient. SLS, who have a specialist science education division, Select Education, suggested a local school, the Nottingham Emmanuel School, who like themselves are located in Wilford.

When approached, Stuart White, Head of Key Stage 3 science at Nottingham Emmanuel School, and Amanda Hampson, Science Technician were delighted with the offer of some free beakers, funnels and other assorted laboratory glassware.

As SLS driver Matt Roulstone made the special delivery to the school, Miss Hampson, herself recently a Biomedical Sciences student at the University of Nottingham, remarked: “Thanks again for the equipment, it's fantastic to have all these pipettes particularly, as they are something we wouldn't have been able to afford.”

Photo: (from left to right) Chris Coleman – Nottingham University Medical School Manager, Stuart White – Nottingham Emmanuel School, Amanda Hampson – Nottingham Emmanuel School, Matt Roulstone – SLS Delivery Driver